Those helping to celebrate the occasion were: Miss Lauren Sparr, Miss Jennifer andMaster Mathew White, Miss Betsy and Masters David and Matt Wilbun, Masters Josh and Zachery Mays, Masters Bret and Dan Wilbun, Miss Katie and Master Erik Powell, Misses Rachael and Ashley Lawson, and Master Mac McDearmon.

Honored guests were Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Payne of Gladstone, maternal grandparents. Mr. George Loukikes, paternal grandfather, visited over the July 4th Holiday for an earlier celebration.

Qualifying for the kingdom

By REV. REX BENNETT
Pastor, Liberty Baptist Church

Scripture Reading: Matthew 18:3 - "Truly, I say to you, unless you turn and become like children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven."

What did Jesus mean when He spoke of the necessity of becoming like children before we can enter God's Kingdom? Could it be that there is really nothing complicated about the answer to this question - perhaps we have made it more complicated than our Lord ever intended it to be!

Observe a child - there is such an expectant eagerness! All children seem to be standing on "tiptoes" as if they were expecting something wonderful and delightful to happen. Nothing is impossible to the mind of a child, and there is never any surprise at anything which occurs.

Those early disciples were like this - in Jesus Christ, they expected things to happen and they usually did. How many of us live with such expectancy? How many of us act as though the Kingdom of God were really at hand? How many of us honestly believe that all things are possible with God. There can never be miracles from God until we believe that miracles are possible with God.

Observe a child - there is such trust, such an obvious confidence! Little else moves a father more than a child's trust in him. Give a child your finger and he will go with you anywhere; tell a child you will catch him if he will jump from a five foot ledge and he will jump without fear or dread. That is something of what our Lord had in mind.

And in order to enter God's Kingdom, we must come to that kind of trust in God. God is sure; He neither slumbers or sleeps; He will forever keep us. In Jesus Christ, there must be a commitment of trust, a commitment whereby we bet our lives on God. Remember those words of Moses in the Old Testament: "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are His everlasting arms."

Observe a child - there is such an acute imagination! In a second, a child can become a policeman or a fireman; with a little doll in hand, a child can become a mother. What an imagination a child has: color, status, prestige, mean absolutely nothing - everyone is someone with whom to play, to laugh, to make up new and exciting games.

Those early disciples were possessed with that kind of an imagination. They imagined and firmly believed that the "kingdoms of this world were becoming the Kingdom of the Christ, and He would reign forever and ever." They imagined and firmly believed that this Kingdom would involved "neither slave nor free, neither rich nor poor, neither Gentile or Jew, neither male or female - all would be one in Jesus Christ."

The pastor speaks

James Russell Lowell once passed a place where upon this sign was nailed: "Home for Incurable Children." Mr. Lowell was heard to say: "They will have me in there yet." God hasten the day when we all shall become incurable children in Jesus Christ - "of such is the Kingdom of God."

The cry of the hostages

By WILLIAM L. TRIMYER
Lesson for July 13, 1980
Scripture Reference: Lamentations
Focal Passages: Lamentations 2:17-21; 3:31-33
The Lord Is True To His Word (Lam. 2:17)

Lamentations is a book of biblical poetry. It contains the struggles and life-threatening experiences of the Jewish people following the fall of their Holy City-Jerusalem. This poetic expression reveals the pain of people in dire distress over their hostage condition. In Lamentations we hear them cry for help and hope to face their captors and the conditions of captivity.

The mood of Lamentations is one of grief and bereavement. The people are faced with the loss of their homeland, friends, possessions and identity. They complain to God over the severity of their conditions and are unable to really understand why they are so brutally punished. But Lam 2:17 reveals that God held to his promises of judgment for the people's disobedience. "The Lord hath done that which he hath devised..."

We humans are often quick to blame God for our misfortune. We think that maybe God deals too harshly with us while overlooking the fact that we are often our own worse enemies. Many of us could God allow such inhumane treatment go unjudged and unchecked.

The people cry unto God and implore Him to take a look at what has befallen them. They did not seem to understand that judgment can be God's way of dealing with His wayward children. He permitted the horrors of war as a judgment against the sins of the people. Yet the poet of Lamentations saw this for he cries to the Lord to "behold" and "consider." But the poet also knew that God was a God of care and compassion for the afflicted.

A God With Open Arms (Lam. 3—31-33)

This section of the Book of Lamentations deals with four distinct moods: despair, hope, penitence, and petition. Verses 31-33 of chapter 3 focus upon the theme of hope and mercy.

It is only by the grace and mercy of God that we are not totally consumed by our troubles. In the pits of despair we may sooner or later discover that God is our only source of hope. When facing an unsure future, we can lay upon His shoulders the heaviness of our concerns. When we are able to open ourselves to God and share our sins and our struggles, we will discover the joy of knowing what it feels like to be accepted. God is a God of open arms; he willingly welcomes us home when we have wandered away and fallen into ruin. We come a long way in our pilgrimage when we are able to acknowledge our wrong and to ask God's forgiveness.

Forgiveness is our's through repentance and confession. And sometimes, in spite of our confession, we must live with the consequences of our violations against God and each other. The people of Judah learned this painful lesson.

Dr. Trimyer is pastor of Elon Baptist Church in Pamplin, Va.

The Bible and daily living

When we experience "life in the pits," we begin to look for sources of hope. We cannot bear the thought that our future might continue in the rut for very long, so we turn to the One who offers hope for a brighter future. The people in captivity made the same move, that is, they began to approach God concerning their woes.

The people of Judah encouraged God to take a close look at the destruction and the agony of the children and the plight of the old. The picture offered in Lam. 2:20-21 is not a very pretty one. The author of Lamentations wonders how in the name of love could God allow such inhumane treatment go unjudged and unchecked.

The people cry unto God and implore Him to take a look at what has befallen them. They did not seem to understand that judgment can be God's way of dealing with His wayward children. He permitted the horrors of war as a judgment against the sins of the people. Yet the poet of Lamentations saw this for he cries to the Lord to "behold" and "consider." But the poet also knew that God was a God of care and compassion for the afflicted.
